Learning with Blindness: Using All the Senses to Learn

Wednesday, November 15 at 12 p.m. EST

FREE Webinar!

For students who are visually impaired, learning how to use all their senses to explore the world around them is crucial to their ability to learn and engage with their surroundings. With strong sensory efficiency skills, students can use their senses – including any usable vision – to get information about objects and their environment. Parents can help build these skills by setting up safe opportunities for their child to explore.

This hour-long webinar will cover:

- How to understand your child's visual impairment and what his or her usable vision might look like
- Ways to encourage and facilitate exploration in a safe manner
- How all the senses can be used to gain information about objects and surroundings
- Tips for building sensory exploration into everyday activities like errands or even a walk around the block
- How to monitor your child's progress and adapt to the constant evolution of building sensory efficiency skills

Webinar presenter: Donna Duggan Edwards, Teacher of the Visually Impaired, Orientation & Mobility Specialist Perkins School for the Blind Register here:
